The KING of DIAMONDS.

By Louis Tracy,
Author of "Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY EDWARD J. CLODE.

"I can see none. Now, the door! Keep inside!"
With quaking heart he listened to Mason's heavy tread along the passage and across the kitchen. He clung to the back of a chair in the effort to calm himself by forcible means. Then he heard the unbolted of the door and the telegraph messenger's prompt announcement:
"Philip Anson, Esq."

Mason came to him carrying the telegram.

Grenier subsided into the chair he held. This time he was prostrated. He could scarcely open the filmy envelope.

Abandoning caution, says there is some mistake. Much love.

That was all, but it was a good deal. Grenier looked up with lackluster eyes. He was almost fainting.

"Send him away," he murmured. "There is nothing to be done. In the morning!"

Mason saw that his ally was nearly exhausted by the reaction. He grinned and cursed.

"Of all the chicken hearted!"
But he went and dismissed the boy. Grenier threw himself at full length on a sofa.

"What's up now?" demanded Mason, finding him prone.

"Wait—just a little while—until my heart stops galloping. That confounded knock! It jarred my spine."

"Take some more brandy."

"How can I? It is impossible. I haven't got an ox head, like you."

Mason placed the lamp on a central table. Its rays fell on Philip's hat. Something in its appearance caught the man's eye. He picked up the hat and examined it critically.

"Do you know," he said, after a silence broken only by Grenier's deep breathing, "I fancy I didn't kill him, after all."

"Not—kill him? Why—he was dead—in that chair—for an hour."

"Perhaps. I hit hard enough, but this hat must have taken some of it. When you were busy, I thought his chest heaved slightly. And just now when I carried him outside he seemed to move."

"Rot!"

"It may be. I struck very hard."

Grenier sat up.

"Even if you are right," he muttered, "it does not matter. He fell 300 feet. The fall alone would kill him. And if he is drowned and the body is picked up it is better so. Don't you see? Even if he were recognized he would be drowned, not—not—Well, his death would be due to natural causes."

He could not bring himself to say "murdered," an ugly word.

"If you were not such a milkop, there would be no fear of his being recognized."

But Grenier laughed a hollow and unconvincing laugh. Nevertheless it was a sign of recovery.

"What nonsense we are talking! A naked man floating dead in the North"

With a mighty swing he threw him outward, clear of the cliff's edge.

sea. Who is he? Not Philip Anson surely! Philip Anson is gayly gadding about England on his private affairs. Where is Green? Hunter, go and tell Green to bring my traps here instantly. I wish him to return to town on an urgent errand."

There was a glint of admiration in Mason's eyes. Here was one with Anson's face, wearing Anson's clothes and addressing him in Anson's voice.

"That's better," he chuckled. "You're clever when your head is clear."

"Now be off for Green. You know what to say."

"You will be alone. Will you be afraid?"

The sneer was the last stimulant Grenier needed.

"If you were called on to stand in Philip Anson's boots during the next week or ten days, my good friend," he quietly retorted, "you would be afraid sixty times in every hour. Your job has nearly ended; mine has barely commenced. Now leave me."

Nevertheless he quitted that chamber of death carrying with him all that he needed and hurrying over the task while he could yet hear the dogcart rattling down the hill.

He commenced with an inventory of Philip's pockets.

His eyes sparkled at the sight of a well-filled pocketbook, with a hundred pounds in notes stuffed therein, cards, a small collection of letters, and other odds and ends. Among Philip's books was Evelyn's hurried note of that morning, and on it a pencilled memorandum:

Sharp left for Devonshire yesterday. Lady M. wrote from Yorkshire.

"That was a neat stroke," he thought Grenier, with a smile—when he snatched by least resembled Philip. "Being a man of affairs, Anson promptly went to the Morlands' solicitors. I was sure of it. I wonder how Jimmie arranged matters with Sharpe. I will know tomorrow at York."

A checkbook in another pocket added to his joy.

"The last rock out of my path," he cried aloud. "That saves two days. The bait took. By Jove! I'm in luck's way!"

There was now no need to write to Philip's bank for a fresh book, which was his first daring expedient.

He seated himself at a table and wrote Philip's signature several times to test his hand. At last it was steady. Then he put a match to a fire all ready for lighting and burned Philip's hat, collar, shirt and underclothing; also the blood stained towel.

When the mass of clothing was smoldering black and red he threw a fresh supply of coal on top of it. The loss of the hat did not trouble him. He possessed one of the same shape and color.

He was quietly smoking a cigar and practicing Philip's voice between the puffs when Mason returned with the valet.

The scene, carefully rehearsed by Grenier in all its details, passed off with gratifying success. Purring with satisfaction, the chief scoundrel of the pair left in the Grange House by the astonished servant began to overhaul the contents of Philip's bag.

It held the ordinary outfit of a gentleman who does not expect to pay a protracted visit—an evening dress suit, a light overcoat, a tweed suit and a small supply of boots and linen. A tiny dressing case fitted into a special receptacle, and on top of this reposed a folded document.

Grenier opened it. Mason looked over his shoulder. It was headed:

"Annual Report of the Mary Anson Home For Destitute Boys."

Mason coarsely cursed both the home and its patron, but Grenier laughed pleasantly.

"The very thing!" he cried. "Look here!"

And he pointed to an indorsement by the secretary:

"For signature if approved of."

"I will sign and return it, with a nice typewritten letter, tomorrow from York. Abingdon is one of the governors. Oh, I will bamboozle them rarely!"

"This blooming charity will help you a bit then?"

"Nothing better. Let us go out for a little stroll. Now, don't forget. Address me as 'Mr. Anson.' Get used to it even if we are alone, and it will be no harm should we happen to meet somebody."

They went down the hill and entered the rough country road that wound up from Scarsdale to the cliff. Through the faint light of a summer's night they saw a man approaching.

It was a policeman.

"Abait onen," said Grenier softly. "What's that?"

"Latin for a cop. You complained of" my want of nerve. Watch me now."

He halted the policeman and questioned him about the locality, the direction of the roads, the villages on the coast. He explained pleasantly that he was a Londoner and an utter stranger in those parts.

"You are staying at the Grange House, sir?" said the man in his turn.

"Yes, come here today, in fact."

"I saw you, sir. Is the gentleman who drove you from Scarsdale staying there too? I met you on the road, and he seemed to know me."

Grenier silently anathematized his carelessness. Policemen in rural Yorkshire were not as common as policemen in Oxford street. It was the same man whom he had encountered hours ago.

"Oh, he is a doctor. Yes, he resides in the Grange House."

"You won't find much room for a party there, sir," persisted the constable. "I don't remember the gentleman at all. What is his name?"

"Dr. Williams. He is a genial sort of fellow—nods to anybody. Take a cigar. Sorry I can't ask you to go up and have a drink, but there is illness in the place."

The policeman passed on.

"Illness," he said, glancing at the gloomy outlines of the farm. "How many of 'em are in 't place, and 'who's you dark lookin' chap, I wonder? My, but his face would stop a clock!"

HAVE YOU SEEN IT

MAYFIELD.

Mrs. M. L. Carter and Mrs. J. I. Carter chaperoned a number of young people Tuesday to Viola, where the day was most delightfully spent in fishing and enjoying a rare good time. Those who went were: Misses Jean Carter, Vivian Mayo, Louise Dudley, Carrie Duncan Hart, Ethel May Cochran; Messrs. Bob Vincent, Flavius Martin, Jewell Hollifield, W. C. Hale and Will D. Wilson.—Mayfield Messenger.

Mr. David Palmer died at the home of his father, six miles north of the city. Consumption was the cause. He was 28 years of age. Funeral services and burial took place at Mt. Zion church at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

Josiah M. Tolbert was adjudged a lunatic before Judge Ed Crossland's court this week and ordered confined in the asylum at Hopkinsville. J. W. Hubbard, of Hopkinsville, arrived Wednesday to accompany him. Tolbert was sent to the asylum once before.

Edgar Dossett, aged 29 years, and son of G. W. Dossett, died Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock at his home in Folsomdale of typhoid fever. He was an Odd Fellow and prominent young man. Besides his parents he is survived by three brothers, Frank, R. O., and Lance, and a sister, Miss Nola. The burial takes place today.

J. W. Rye, former depot agent has resigned his position with the Mayfield Grocery company, and has gone to Paducah to accept a position with the Southern Weighing and Inspection bureau to succeed his brother, W. J. Rye, who takes a traveling position.

One Trouble With Corporations.

If we are earnest and persistent in our denunciation of corporate abuses we endeavor always to act with justice and discrimination. The force of our own arguments would otherwise be lost. We are as ready and as anxious to commend the great corporate systems of the state as we are to impugn them, if they will but afford the justification by showing some disposition to meet the wishes of the people. The general public feels the same way. They are as ready to distribute praise as blame. The trouble is that most of the large corporations assume an attitude of defiance. They violate the law and treat the people with contempt. They substitute insolence for conciliation.—Atlanta (Ga.) Journal.

—"Overenthusiasm" of buyers sometimes handicaps a store very heavily—but a little "overzeal" in advertising will adjust things.

FOR CHILD'S SAKE

SHE SACRIFICED HER MARITAL LIFE IN DIVORCE COURT.

Strange Affection Between Wife and the Child of Her Husband's Mistress.

New York, July 18.—Torn by two strong emotions—hatred for the woman who won her husband from her, and love for one of that woman's two nameless children—Mrs. Isabelle Cunningham, Brooklyn, has asked for divorce from her husband, Joseph T. Cunningham, in order that he may marry the other woman and give the child a name.

In talking of her suit today Mrs. Cunningham said: "It is perhaps unfortunate that I love little Dorothy under such circumstances, but she has such a place in my affections I am determined to see her face the world unhindered, even at the cost of all that has been dear to me."

"I have come to regard it as my duty to release Mr. Cunningham and leave him free to marry this woman who, of course, I cannot help hating. But it is all for the best. I have offered to make Dorothy, their eldest child, my heir if she is taught to love me."

"I have exacted from Mr. Cunningham a promise that he would marry the woman, Lizzie Dempsey, for the children's sake, as I have learned to love the elder girl, who is sweet and pretty, and comes to stop with me for weeks at a time."

Knew Husband's Conduct for Years.
Justice Scudder in the supreme court, Brooklyn, will say in a few days if this curious application for a divorce is to be granted.

For years, Mrs. Cunningham, the wife of an engineer for a Broadway concern, who lives in Brooklyn, has endured the agony of knowing her husband was leading a double life and that she had only a small part of his affection. Once she horsewhipped the other woman when she found her with her husband. Her husband lost his position on account of it, but did not repent. Then Mrs. Cunningham sued her husband for non-support, but dropped the case.

A few years ago Mrs. Cunningham brought suit against Elizabeth Dempsey for alienation of her husband's affections. She asked an injunction to restrain her from meeting Cunningham. The martial troubles of the couple by this time had gained considerable notoriety, and Mrs. Cunningham's "injunction scheme for erring husbands" caused some comment. The process was unsatisfactory.

Bogota, City Without Railroad.
We are apt to think that a great city, containing the comforts and elegancies of modern life, cannot exist without railroads at its gates. Bogota, the capital of the Republic of Colombia, is an exception. Having a population of 125,000, fine residences, excellent schools and colleges, literary, artistic and musical societies, clubs, polo, tennis, balls, dinners, elegant society that knows the Parisian fashions, Bogota lies on a plateau itself. But to get to it by the mose used route one must journey two and a half days on muleback. Another way of approach, reducing the mule ride to seven or eight hours, requires several days of river navigation. But the railroad is coming, although late.—Youths' Companion.

Railroads Drop Cheap Excursions.
New Orleans, La., July 17.—Nearly all the railroads have annulled their usual summer excursions to points in Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Alabama.

The Louisville and Nashville will, of course, continue to run its coast excursions, but the Illinois Central, Yazoo and Mississippi Valley and the Southern Pacific have been compelled to abandon their excursions, because of a threat from the people living along the lines that they would quarantine against this city if the roads continue to offer low rates into New Orleans.

Railroad officials say it is because the residents in small towns declare that the cheap rates take their help away from them and serve to depopulate the villages.
